Overview

Do employers have to provide lockers?

Employers don't necessarily have to provide employees with storage lockers, however, a space to change and store clothing is required if staff members need to get changed on-site.

Are heated lockers a good addition to the workplace?

If you have introduced a "cycle to work" scheme, or you are required to provide an area for workers clothes to dry, heated lockers could be a great addition to the workplace. These lockers can come with metal or laminate doors depending on your aesthetic needs.

Do you need a safety locker?

If you are required to wear safety clothing or use safety equipment, or perhaps PPE for the role, then a locker may also be required. Metal lockers can be fitted with a steel sheet divider to keep personal clothing separate from soiled workwear, and shelves can be included for PPE, bags and personal belongings.

Are lockers necessary?

" The short answer would be no. However, there are many situations where lockers are imperative for people to complete their jobs successfully. For example, should staff members be required to get changed on site, lockers are a necessary requirement for an employer.

What are employee locker rooms & changing rooms?

Employee locker rooms and changing rooms are an important part of every workplace. Not only do they help keep the area clean and tidy, but they also increase the comfort and safety of employees. By law, changing rooms must be set up for those employees who must wear work or protective clothing and cannot change in another area for some reason.

What should a locker room look like?

Locker rooms should be large enough for employees to change clothes comfortably and store their belongings. It is also important to think about the fact that people can go to work, for example, by bicycle. Some employers support this type of transport and are ready for it.
