What is a pineng 969 power bank?

The Pineng 969 is a 20,000mAh power bank that comes in white or black and red color. Located at the front is a screen that accurately displays the remaining charge of the power bank. At the top, there are two USB outputs, capable of charging two devices at the same time. There's also a MicroUSB port to charge the device.

Is the pineng PN 957 a good power bank?

The Pineng PN 957 is a 10,000mAh power bank that has four built-in wires to charge most mobile devices. Though the wires are short, it still adds a lot of convenience and portability since you don't have to bring your own. Unfortunately, this does add a layer of vulnerability since it's impossible to replace these wires.

How does the pineng PN 888 work?

The Pineng PN 888 is a 10,000mAh power bank with a screen that displays the battery level, and Qi wireless charging in front. On the right, there's a built-in, removable USB to MicroUSB cable. At the top, you can find a MicroUSB input and a Quick Charge 3.0 enabled USB output. At the bottom, Pineng added a MicroUSB to USB Type-C adapter.

What is the difference between pineng PN 985 and PN 986?

The main difference is that the PN 985 has regular USB outputs, while the PN 986 is equipped with two Quick Charge USB outputs. On the side, there's a power switch to turn the power bank on from sleep. The Pineng PN 957 is a 10,000mAh power bank that has four built-in wires to charge most mobile devices.

How many USB ports does a pineng PN 956 have?

Located at the back and at the sides are the four built-in output cables: one USB, one MicroUSB, one USB Type-C, and one Lightning connector. The Pineng PN 956 (black) and PN 959 (white) have a 10,000mAh and 20,000mAh capacity respectively. They also have two built-in wires on both sides.
