Are you looking at the first image of another Solar System?

"You are looking [at] the first image of another solar system," the post claimed. The assertion had some truth to it. The image indeed showed a special astronomical phenomenon: two exoplanets, which are planets outside of our solar system, orbiting a 17-million-year-old star like our sun, dubbed TYC 8998-760-1.

What is a solar system family portrait?

First-Ever Solar System Family. The Solar System "family portrait" is the final series of 60 images captured by NASA's Voyager 1 that show six of our solar system's planets. It remains the first and only time — so far — a spacecraft has attempted to photograph our home solar system.

What does the Solar System look like in real life?

In real life, the Solar System looks pretty much the same as the night sky that we see from Earth. Indeed, when you look at the night sky, you're seeing a large part of the Solar System. Most of what you see is outside the Solar System but you're also seeing some of the things in it.

Top 100 Images

Hubble's high-resolution images of the planets and moons in our Solar System can only be surpassed by pictures taken from spacecraft that actually visit them. Hubble even has one advantage over these probes: it can look at these objects periodically and observe them over much longer periods than any passing probe could.
