The deep darkness of space might not actually be so dark in our solar system. Astronomers analyzed over 200,000 images from NASA's Hubble Space Telescope, making tens of thousands of measurements

A 'ghostly glow' is surrounding our solar system and Scientists have revealed that a 'ghostly glow' is surrounding our solar system, but it's not clear what it is or where it's coming from. The glow is a bit of a mystery, especially considering it continues despite light sources - for example stars and galaxies - having been taken out of the equation.

A Ghostly Glow of Light Surrounds The Solar System, And ...

All the stars and galaxies surrounding the Solar System - and zodiacal light, aka dust on the Solar System's plane - none of these can explain what astronomers are now calling "ghost light". After analyzing 200,000 Hubble images and taking thousands of measurements in a project called SKYSURF, an international collaboration is sure the excess light is real.

Hubble Detects Mysterious Ghostly Glow Surrounding Our Solar System

This would be any leftover light after subtracting the glow from planets, stars, galaxies, and from dust in the plane of our solar system (called zodiacal light). When researchers completed this inventory, they found an exceedingly tiny excess of light, equivalent to the steady glow of 10 fireflies spread across the entire sky.
